The actual owner of the Algonquin appears to be John D. Stephenidis, a lawyer at No. 27 William Street. He is also associated with the American Star Line and with J. M. Benas & Co., the subsea shipping agents who acted for him in the purchase of the vessel. Mr. Stephanidis is an American. The Algonouin had been chartered for the subsea ships trail at a distance and accomplish their fell purposes after dusk or clee remain submerged and immobile in the day, coming up at night to wait for prey. Algonquin had been chartered for the return voyage by the H. F. Taintor Manufacturing Company, of this city, to bring a cargo from London.

BIDS ON CRUISERS

There is another American steamship called the Algonquin. She was for many years in the coastwise service of the Clyde Line and recently was in the West Indies trade. In the first reports this Algonquin was confused with the lost vessel.

The officers of the Algonquin were working on a 50 per cent, war bonus basis, and the crew receives a bonus of 25 per cent. Wages and bonuses continue until the men are returned to New York at the expense of their employer. Ship and cargo were in-sured.

ALGONQUIN SINKING WILL CAUSE SPEED IN ARMING OF U. S. SHIPS

All That Can Be Done Short of Declaration of War by Congress.

WASHINGTON, March 14.-Counsel Stephens at Plymouth reported the sinking of the Algonquin in the following despatch:

"Steamer Algonquin, of New York, from New York for London with foodstuffs, sunk by German submarine sixty-five west of Bishops (Rock), March 12, 6 A. M. Captain reports vessel not warned, and sunk by shell fire. Crow of all saved in own boats. Submarine refused assistance. No other boats in sight."

This does not change the situation in relation to Germany, but will probably speeding up in the arming of U. S. ships.

President Wilson already has taken steps to place the nation in a state of submarine attack. The general view only answer to submarine operations and thirty-one months. short of a declaration of war, which may be made only by Congress.
